Narrator: American observers watch the shelling of Nazi positions in Acerno, a town in the path of the American advance in southern Italy. Orders are given to move up. In trucks and jeeps the Fifth Army rolls ahead. The twisted wreckage of powerful German Mark IV tanks lines the route of the Nazi retreat. Now the Americans occupy Acerno. Carefully they search for snipers, still concealed in the ruins of demolished streets. Captured Nazi soldiers are herded behind the lines. In accordance with international law, one is questioned by an intelligence officer. All find United States Army rations a welcome treat. Regiments of American soldiers of Japanese ancestry are a part of the United States Fifth Army [...]
